Associate Law ProfessorBy Lewis EldridgeLewis Eldridge's scholarly work, "Capitalism: The New Segregation," examines and reflects on the relationship between economic inequality, African American history, racism and segregation from a spiritual, historical, and theological perspective.At a time, when deep divisions in our society are universally acknowledged,

Lewis Eldridge's book provides readers with a serious and fresh intellectual approach and discussion of the underlying issues reflected in the public discourse on 'black lives matter', blue lives matter, and all lives matter. If ...By Nia Grier This is a well written thought provoking book. If you are on a journey of awakening to understand how media, economics, entertainment, and sports exploit and get rich off a already exploited people. This book has turned on a few more lights. Lewis Eldridge research and organization is superb as well as his choice of words he uses to express his points. This book is a must read! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Excellent!! By Customer Excellent review of black history and current black evolution. This book can be taught in schools particularly to our young black Americans. The book is on time current social economic disparities and can aid social activist organizations with proper planning and execution for the future. I also enjoyed the quick chapters, very easy to read.

As the wealthiest 1% of the entire American population owns 99% of the United States' total cumulative wealth, likewise, the wealthiest 1% of all African-Americans currently owns 56% of the combined African-American cultural wealth as of 2011. This phenomenon occurred within the exact same two decades of capitalistic victory celebrations after the end of the Cold War, in 1991. During the same 20 years, 1991-2011, exactly one generation, while the U.S. experienced the decadence of toxic leveraged debt leading to the greatest housing market crash in the history of humanity, a global economic crisis, and the Great Recession, African-Americans, simultaneously, experienced the rise of the celebrity class which established the obvious realities of assimilation, acculturation, and the polarization of internal ethnic and cultural capitalism, i.e., the rich and the poor class. According to projections, complete assimilation will occur, mirroring the present American economic polarization of wealth, when the richest 1% of all African-Americans will own 98% of their entire net-worth by 2026. Slavery is no longer blatantly existent but abstract through various forms of enslavement. Segregation is no longer spatial or racial but internal. The oppressor is no longer racism, its classism. The greatest division in America is between the "haves" and "have-not's"!
