The narrative about the history of this battlefield is beautifully written and truly brings the battlefield to life. The images in this book are stunning. The narrative about the history of this battlefield is beautifully written and truly brings the battlefield to life. I am really impressed!

Fought in and around the small farming community of Sharpsburg, Maryland on September 17, 1862, the Civil War Battle of Antietam produced more casualties in one day than any other single day in American military history. With roughly 23,000 combined casualties from both the Army of Northern Virginia and the Army of the Potomac, a man was killed or wounded every two seconds for eleven straight hours...In Civil Warscapes: Antietam, Images from the 17th of September, Matthew A. Holzman presents the scenic locations where these monumental events occurred. Events that forever changed the course of American history. A vivid characteristic about this companion is that all included photos were actually taken on the anniversary of the battle. This feature allows one to experience the landscape with quite literally the same vegetation and foliage that thousands of Union and Confederate soldiers did when the guns opened up here over one hundred and fifty years ago. Overall, this work is meant to provide a short but detailed history of the battle and serve as a traveling field aid for both the casual and serious visitor to the site. Stories of the farmsteads and the chronology of troop movements in key locations are highlights. Different perspectives of the varying terrain around the Cornfield, Bloody Lane, and Burnside Bridge are all included.

From the Author When considering the fact that Antietam is perhaps the most well-preserved and pristine major Civil War battlefield in the country, one cannot help but marvel at its landscape in this ever modernizing time. I am forever grateful for the preservation efforts that have protected this historic shrine over the years. It is personally a true privilege to walk and absorb the same ground that my great-great-grandfather did from September-October 1862. From the Back Cover The bloodiest single day in American military history...About the Author Originally from North Royalton, Ohio, Matthew A. Holzman received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Shepherd University in West Virginia in December 2011. Concentrating in the Civil War and Nineteenth Century America, he completed an internship at Harpers Ferry National Historical Park which entailed him to research the role and importance of the Quartermaster. He recently worked a seasonal term as a Park Ranger at Arlington House, The Robert E. Lee Memorial and published his first book, Civil Warscapes: Images of American Sanctuaries, Eastern Theater 1861-1863, which showcases the scenery from some of the earliest significant battlefields in the war including Manassas, Harpers Ferry, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg. Considering the study of the war to be a lifelong education, he takes every available opportunity to travel to its battlefields and related sites. He currently resides in Manassas, Virginia.
