Phil EnglishThis is a truly marvelous naval history which not only provides a carefully documented account of the actual engagement at Aboukir Bay, but also a rich account of the navies, their practices, tactics and weapons, and a sense of the experience of war at sea in the age of Napoleon. The author provides compelling insight into the character of Lord Nelson and his unique hold on the British imagination during the conflict, as well as the strategic significance of the battle. This account serves to put in context the contemporary coverage of the battle, correcting the record but also quantifying the tactical superiority of Nelson and his team of captains. The strategic importance of Nelson's victory- protecting the vulnerable Indian underside of the British Empire- is explored with insights as useful as those of the battle itself. For any lover of the period, and of the British Navy, this book is a real treat that offers the reader a well crafted and beautifully documented history that brings to life the battle, as well as one of the most colorful periods of modern European history. I recommend it with enthusiasm. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Definitely worth picking up. By Jetpack Nelson is clearly up there on the list of interesting historical figures. Arguably the greatest Admiral ever, Nelson was also a very flawed person. Which makes for one heck of a read. Nelson took chances in battle, which normally paid off. He also, arguable, died at the right time in his life. 7.805 locations. Picked up while free. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Excellent. By T. Bagley More detail than you really want, but not boring. Great for the in depth person, good for the casual reader. Enjoy

This work gives a full account of Nelson's Mediterranean campaign of 1798. It provides insight into naval strategy and tactics of the period, shipboard life and routine in the British and French navies, and is also an account of Nelson's first fleet command, where the "Band of Brothers" which won Trafalgar was formed.
