Kalargo and his uncle barely escaped genocide from Gambia. Their plans to travel as a stowaway to America had changed when they woke up in South Korea; with a twist of fate, he was adopted by a Korean American. Many years later, Kalargo became an international arms dealer for the North Koreans, sending weapons to help the Gambians. When his only living relative is murdered, he knows his days are numbered. His last trip to Africa changed his life when the North Koreans discovered untouched natural resources and they ask him to do something he does not want to do. They want to colonize Gambia and they will kill him if he doesn't cooperate. After a business trip that went bad, his fiancée is worried she will never see him again and his adopted father's actions may get him killed or save his life. Facing life changing events, he has to choose, the North Koreans or his own people. The Gambians need him, people are dying, secrets are being revealed and time is running out. Gambia is under pressure, what will he do?
