But sticking it out and finishing the cruise as it were, is a rewarding experience. Taken back to a time of realism, with a helping of romanticism, the writer shows us life on board the Confederate raider Alabama. Readers in our time must take time in reading the narrative and build in their minds the pictures the author presents, as the words are very factual and not flowing with adjectives and allegory as maybe is more popular in today's writing. Excellent book, great read. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Pretty Boring. By Fritz Nelius Very difficult to read. Written by member of crew who wrote as writing to other seamen of that time. Pretty boring as far as action is concerned. Very well documented of action of ship and crew Don't read if you desire adventure and action. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Great sea novel of historical war cruise By James C. Perry Very little has been written about Civil War naval operations especially highlighting any CSA success. Sinclair's writing makes you feel like you were part of Alabama's crew. I loved living it.

"A picturesque account of life on Semmes's ship." About the Author Arthur Sinclair (May 1837- November 1925), the son and grandson of U.S. Navy officers. He served at sea under his father in the 1850s but had returned to civilian life by the time of the the 1860-61 secession crisis. Sinclair entered Southern naval service and served in CSS United States and in other ships during 1861, and on board the ironclad Virginia during her battle with USS Monitor on 9 March 1862. Appointed to the rank of Acting Master in August 1862, he was an officer of CSS Alabama, under Captain Raphael Semmes, during her destructive commerce raiding career in 1862-64.
